Recommendation for Emeritus Status

Timothy Doyle

School of Technology Studies

College of Technology

Timothy Doyle became an instructor in the Interdisciplinary Technology Department in August, 1986. He took on the role of Coordinator for the Aviation Management Technology Program. Under his leadership the program grew both in numbers and success. He continued in this role as the Interdisciplinary Technology Department became part of the new School of Technology Studies in July, 2004.

Tim has been the mainstay of the program and has positively affected hundreds of students who have gained more than a degree from EMU with their major in Aviation Management Technology. They grew as human beings as well as getting jobs in the aviation industry. In a large part their success is due to the tireless efforts of their major instructor, advisor and friend.

On a personal level, my wife and I entrusted our eighteen year old son to Tim and the Aviation Management Program. Tim provided him with the most positive of role models. Today we admire our 36 year old son and give Tim much of the credit for his success as a fine human being.

Tim Doyle has stayed relevant in the field of aviation as both a consultant and a pilot. His many contacts within the aviation industry have kept this program strong and its graduates able to achieve high levels of professional and personal success. Also, Tim has always been a supporter of EMU inside and outside of the College of Technology. You can see him on many Saturday afternoons cheering on the EMU football team.

We are going to miss having Tim as a member of our STS faculty team; however, it is without reservation that I recommend Timothy Doyle for Emeritus status upon his retirement in January, 2006.

Statement of Support for Emeritus Status Recommendation
Professor Sarah Moore

Sarah retired from the Apparel, Textiles & Merchandising Program after 40 years of service. She has always been a strong supporter of Eastern Michigan University shown by her years of dedication and loyalty. During her tenure she witnessed her program's growth from being one of the smallest programs in her college to it becoming the fastest growing program.

In 1995 Sarah assumed the role of program coordinator and, under her guidance, enrollment in her program doubled due in great part to her student-centered advising and concern for student success. She played a major role in the updating and evolution of the Fashion Merchandising program into the Apparel, Textiles & Merchandising (ATM) program. The conversion to ATM included a shift in focus from fashion to textiles and computer-aided design for the apparel, automotive and furniture industries. Sarah collaborated with the department head in submitting a successful proposal to the Research Excellence Fund that led to the establishment of the Textiles Research & Training Institute (TRTI), and she was instrumental in identifying and hiring the present director of the TRTI. Sarah was well known throughout the area in the fields of retail, merchandising and apparel and this brought up-to-date contacts, speakers, field trips and jobs for students in the ATM program. She also created an active and supportive professional advisory board that provided substantial input to her program.

Sarah was the recipient of such awards as the Josephine Nevins Keal Professional Development Fellowship (1993); Faculty Appreciation Award (1995); and a J. C. Penney Faculty Internship Award (1996). She was also selected as an Academic Service Learning Faculty Fellow in 1997. Sarah also created and carried out one of EMU's first faculty internships, which took place at Jacobson's in Dearborn, MI and at their corporate headquarters in Jackson, MI during fall and winter of 1989/90.

She was active in Fashion Group International; the International Textile & Apparel Association; the American Costume Society; the American Association of Family & Consumer Sciences; and the Fashion Group of Detroit. She served seven years as the faculty advisor for the EMU Panhellenic Council, and also worked regularly with the student organization within her own program.
